

Hi 5 Pullman!

Another week stuck at home, I hope you are all safe! How have you been finding the online learning? Good I hope! I know it is different from what you are used to doing, but the teachers have been working really hard to make sure you keep getting a great education and to keep yourself busy in this crazy time. An update on me. I have been busy each day planning for the upcoming weeks and also writing some of your reports! In my spare time I have enjoyed going for walks/jogs, reading a new book called "The Prince of Thorns", and talking to all of my friends and family back home in Australia on video call. Now I want you to know that I have been missing you all incredibly! I was lucky enough to see Ayuub and his dad as I went on my daily jog the other day! It was lovely to see him again and it reminded me even more how much I miss your smiling faces each and every day! I honestly cannot wait until we can continue our classes together, so please stay safe and try and keep yourself busy so it's not as boring being stuck at home all the time.

Now before I go I wanted to share a funny poem with you. I have been the one planning your science activities for homework/online learning but these are not good excuses why you did not complete it! Haha.

Science Homework

I hope that you believe me
for I wouldn't tell a lie.
I cannot turn my science homework in
and this is why:

I messed up the assignment
that you gave us yesterday.
It burbled from its test tube
and went slithering away.

It wriggled off the table
and it landed with a splat,
convulsed across my bedroom floor
and terrorized the cat.

It shambled down the staircase
with a horrid glorping noise.
It wobbled to the family room
and gobbled all my toys.

It tumbled to the kitchen
and digested every plate.
That slimy blob enlarged
with every item that it ate.

It writhed around the living room
digesting lamps and chairs,
then snuck up on our napping dog
and caught him unawares.

I came to school upset today.
My head's in such a fog.
But this is my excuse:
You see, my homework ate my dog.
